Further details

Thunderstorms are expected across parts of England at times on Tuesday. Storms are likely to spread north from France during the early hours, before most likely clearing into the North Sea by day. During the day there is then a small risk of potentially severe thunderstorms developing over land. Whilst most locations will miss storms altogether, where they do develop, 20-30 mm of rain could fall in one hour, with a few spots perhaps seeing as much as 40-60 mm in one hour, which is very unusual for the UK. Large hail, lightning and gusty winds are also likely.

Reason for update

Warning updated to reflect where thunderstorms considered most likely.
